Visitors to New Orleans have for several years gazed with wonderment at the mainmoth oyster shells in front of Borges' Restaurant, on Custom-house street. These are said to be exceeded in size by one recently received in California. The State Museum of California has become the owner of the shell of an enormous bivalve of the tridacna gigas species, which welghs 528 pounds. It was purchased at Singapore, and is a gift to the Museum. A similar shell sent by the Republic of Venice to Francis I, now serves as a holy water font in the Church of St. Sulpice, at Paris.
